

A Modern Dystopia in the Scientific Age

The planetary biosphere has decline in recent months as much of the world has undergone a praecox shock that has cause humanity's thought processes to become permanently graphic and intense. Causing violent antisocial behavior to become more frequent and erratic. With a looming environmental crisis and a decline in biodiversity -- due to deforestation cause by human overpopulation, an outcome of global warming, much of what is understood as the norms of Post-Modernist thought has collapse into a planet that has reach the Scientific Age.

Giving the fall-out of scientific radicalism and the counter-reaction to pure philosophy, a pathological mass-movement has rendered the expectation of Post-Modernist social, ethical, and political values incapable. That is what seemingly stands as a planet in recovery, whether or not any statistical data can show a decline in violence, is in actual quiet mayhem and volatility. Where the political and scientific process cannot reconcile ideology, of both neo-Fascism and social progressivism, with the skeptical inquiry and progressive sentimentality of the philosophical sciences.

As the planet now resides as a modernist world living in a Dystopian reality in the Scientific Age. For what seems, on a large-scale, as the beginning of peaceful existence (when magnified) is, in truth, a planet where much of what is understood and observed is not what it seems. And for which much of humanity presides in a Dystopian reality that is meager and counterproductive -- both in its inability to actualize human potential and market forces. Human potential and market forces that are in favor of natural and human rights.

For those reasons neo-liberalism, academic elitism, and establishment politics has failed to realize expectations in a planet where humanity does not achieve said expectation, rather peace and tranquility is nothing more than personal conflict and universal despair. A despairing fact that is beholden to a truthful realization of desperation and extremism in both the sciences and the political domain.
