

Delirium of the Sciences

Radical science is the horrific response to a breakdown between the avant-garde and the economic establishment during the eve of the Brexit -- the fall of the European nation-state. A vehement criminal act instigated by one of the most frightening crime rings in world history. Where as Theresa May suspects that the United Kingdom should assert its independence from the European common market, the European state foresees the rising threat of ultra-nationalist hostility. Ultra-nationalism that morph into a neo-Fascist alliance.

An alliance that has radicalized the political establishment and impose ultra-nationalism as its core national policy. Even then -- with the Canadian and the American agreement for a modification to the NAFTA trade deal (proposed by the U.S. President Donald Trump and the Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau), only encourages greater isolationism and nationalist sentimentality -- in the formulation of stipulations and penalties design to discourage global trade and to increase independent economic productivity.

While curtailing immigration policy in the U.S. (which not only helps migrants but also it's largely service base economy) and deregulating key market forces -- that keeps supply and/or demand stable by way of banking regulation. That said, an anticipatory shock in the global economy (beginning with the Asian American trade dispute) has shown that social democracy has reach its permanent demise. Instigated by almost 12 years of irresponsible and atypical economic decision-making (a consequentiality of the 2007-2012 economic depression which spark the emergence of political radicalism).

But the British governments insistence to breakup from the European nation-state -- is nonetheless, a wishful desire to impose the Commonwealth of Nations as the dominant economic union. A union of nations that surrounds the United States.

A growing union seeking to establish strong ties to the British state but in which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) is only a few steps away. And while the British monarchy continues to promote the British state, racial supremacy only ensues and a crime of passion becomes a fatal decision to invigorate a global monarchical institution in the form of a powerful dynasty class.

That alone, means that Queen Elizabeth II continues to encourage British neo-Fascism and to provoke the New Left. Assuming that provocation and incitement will propel the solidification of British nationalism. Yet blinded by the factual nature that the European aristocracy could potentially retaliate against the British state to protect what's left of the permanently declining European nation-state.

The queen's wishful dream is the signification of a vehement British prime minister that knows no proper bounds with the European state. And in which scientific radicalism has shown itself to be a deadly force that has cause the political and the scientific establishment, in the U.S. and the U.K., to become ineffective. Ineffective in its unwillingness to neutralize the radicalization of the sciences -- but also in its toleration of scientific radicalism.

The United States has undergone a breakdown in the union of states. And in which the corporate governorship has been solidified (due to a power-struggle between varying competing interests). Resulting in economic policies that favor the wealthier class -- transferring massive wealth, power and privilege to a corporate authority.

Where the constitutional order has since then collapse (a violent breakdown of the centrist-government). And also where American political radicalism has become the center-stage in the U.S. media and tabloids.

The U.S. Congressional elections is only then the foreshadowing of a scientific dictatorship. Whereby a debating body is nonetheless indicative of a failed policy era of cult-policy making.

A debating body that has become a permanent fixture of a broken U.S. constitutional order in which the dominant corporate governorship dictates terms to the free market. Yet the outcry of social activists that are suspicious of the Commonwealth Charter -- it's dire emphases for large concentrations of wealth to a privilege few and the promotion of privilege (in the manner of needless honorship).

Sidestepping the democratic principles of parliamentary democracy stipulated by the Magna Carta.

The radicalization of the sciences -- in its most delirious formulation, has meant that the sciences has falling down an incline plane into both radicalism and fantasy (in which the sciences have lost contact with the reality of the natural and/or social sciences -- the impartiality of the experimental process).

An indication that fame and/or fortune is falsely seen as the driving force of the sciences. But in which war-crime becomes the end consequentiality of such fame and/or fortune.

Where unreason is a deadly guide -- that signifies a frightening Virgil of European and American malevolence. Manifesting as atypical decision-making (of a modernist dystopian reality that will last for at least half a century). Understood as a vehement passionate act of both political extremism and the perplexity of scientific radicalization.

And yet a belligerent crime of extreme delirium.
