

masses move in space because they need to cover a volume of half the universe and they expand in the universe because there is more volume out there and the mass cannot help but discover more because of its inertia so it spins and then expands in the universe